- Get a competitive job edge with alternative dispute resolution training and a certificate in Non-Violent Crisis Intervention
- Attractive entry-level salaries average approximately $35,000 to $60,000 per year
- There is such a strong demand for Community and Justice Services professionals that many students receive job offers before they graduate

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

- Students entering this program should have a strong desire to make our communities safer
- Graduates work with youth and/or adults at risk in a vast range of settings: youth custody facilities, child welfare homes, federal and provincial correctional facilities, attendance centres, community justice agencies, victim support agencies, and a variety of residential facilities for people at risk
- Graduates who successfully complete the provincial or federal correctional system recruitment process will receive additional training upon employment

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

- This recently updated program has a three-fold focus on prevention, intervention and reintegration
- Studies in behaviour management, conflict resolution, applied psychology, criminology, and addictions focus on prevention. Intervention skills include interviewing and counselling, case management, program development, and suicide intervention
- Reintegration emphasizes guiding clients back into the community, and may involve anything from life skills (such as managing a budget and personal hygiene) to cognitive restructuring, anger management and addictions counselling
- Dedicated faculty guide students through practical, hands-on activities that include scenario-based role playing, case studies, and tours of existing facilities
- Students develop effective assessment and communication skills, and learn best practices to ensure personal safety, protection of the public, and the safety of staff, clients and the community
- Two four-week field placements in a relevant community or justice agency allow students to make an immediate and significant contribution while they define their career direction
